of a hilly and rolling nature, and generally under good cultivation.

In France most of the museums and picture galleries are free and open to the public; there is probably no country where they are so fine. On this assumption, and learning that the halls of statuary contained some very good pieces, and especially some by David, of Angers, I hunted it up, and seeing all open and no concierge entered. My attention was first drawn to a bust of Victor Hugo when a young man. It was poor in execution and entirely wanting in expression. The next object was a reclining statue of Fenelon, by David. While studying the position and countenance, "here opened wide the door, darkness there and nothing more." But it was the darkness of the frowning visage of an enraged and outraged concierge. The manner in which he ordered meout was surprising, to me at least, No amount of a pology and explanareached through a long, narrow, withing way, on sither side of which are high black walls, topped with broken bottlee. These walls are of slate; it fact, the greater part of Angers is of slate, it being situated in an immense slate region. The almost universal use of slate, esperially in the older parts, gives the place a dark and sombre appearance. It is from this tact it derives its name of 'black Angers,' Its situation is rather hilly and on the river. The newer parts of the town have a next and clean appearance, and are thoroughly French. There are boulevailed, cafes, etc. its cathedral is very ordinary, and may be seen and forgotten in a very few minutes. The castle is very large and said to be the best preserved leudal castle in all France. It is easily believed, as a walk around it and through it very on shows. The fosse is very deep and wide. A part of it was under cutivation, mostly flowers. One side faces the river, and formerly the river weeked the castlewaits. Now it does not conform strictly to the law in every particular, and parties using these Blanks will find them to be the best over used in this Territory:

The manner in which he ordered me out was surprising to me at least. No amount of apology and explanation could soften his anger. I was ordered to go, and went. Uncle Toby when he resul the Papal analhema said: "The army in Flanders awore terribly, but they didn't swear like that." This concierge surprassed the army in Flanders and the Papal analhema combined. I don't believe that is a very good museum anyhow.

Angers is quite a business place. that is a very good museum anybow.

Angers is quite a business place, and there is a general aspect of progress. The boot blacks here solicit business, and do not require to have a letter directed to them ten days beforehand. It is the first French town in which they have done so, the country from Angers is of a slightly rolling nature; the soil of a reddish color and gravelly. The view is pleasant now because all the fields are green and the trees in leaf.
